Mario Cravo Neto and candomblé The Brazilian photographer Mario Cravo Neto (1947-2009) was strongly inspired by the Afro-Brazilian religion of candomblé. Elements of this religion come from the Yoruba culture, brought to Brazil by African slaves, but as a "heathen" religion candomblé was forbidden in Brazil until as late as the 1970s.

In the Spirit of Nature - Huis Marseille
Mario Neto drew on various elements in constructing an artistic idiom that blended religion and eroticism, violence and drama, nature and culture. He depicted rituals and mythologies expressing the syncretism symbolic of the cultural, ethnic and racial melting-pot of north-eastern Brazil: the blending of native traditions with the cultural legacy of Portuguese and African settlers during the colonial period.

Mario Cravo Neto has captured Candomblé in Brazil through the lens of his camera. His show titled "Mario Cravo Neto: A Serene Expectation of Light" recently in 2016 featured powerful images of Afro-Brazilian experience, black unity, and post-colonial defiance centering on Candomblé as a cultural practice.
